

65,000 mugs are missing from Tesla's German factory

Description

At Tesla's Gigafactory in Germany, a surprising workplace issue has arisen - missing coffee mugs. Plant manager Andre Thierig expressed frustration in a staff meeting, revealing that a staggering 65,000 coffee mugs have disappeared from the factory since production began. In a bid to address this peculiar problem, Thierig threatened to remove cutlery from the break room if the thefts continued. Despite the seriousness of safety and pay concerns at the factory, employees responded to the mug dilemma with laughter and applause during the meeting.

This issue comes amidst a backdrop of broader challenges at the Gigafactory, including safety problems and labor disputes. The factory has faced criticism from environmentalists for tree clearances and impacts on local water sources. Additionally, a recent arson attack left the factory and nearby residents without power, drawing a visit from CEO Elon Musk. Despite these serious challenges, the case of the missing mugs has added a lighter, albeit perplexing, touch to the ongoing saga at Tesla's German factory.
