

Absolutely Not a Stolen Lamborghini Listed on Facebook Marketplace, No Way

Description

Looking for a steal on a Lamborghini Gallardo? A recent listing on Facebook Marketplace might catch your eye. Priced at just $35,000, this 2009 Lamborghini Gallardo LP 560-4 Coupe 2D with 20,000 miles seems like a great deal. However, there are some red flags to consider.

The listing mentions that the car does not start and is stuck in drive, with no title provided. The seller, known as "Bagg Chaser," seems eager to sell, even posting a second listing the next day with a reduced price of $34,000. In this updated listing, "Bagg Chaser" claims to now have the title but asks buyers to meet at a friend's house to complete the transaction.

While the price may be enticing, it's essential to proceed with caution. Similar models in the area are listed for significantly higher prices by reputable dealers and private sellers. With questionable details and a suspicious backstory, this Lamborghini listing raises many concerns.

Whether you're a flag enthusiast or simply searching for a good deal, remember to do your due diligence before making any decisions. As the saying goes, if something seems too good to be true, it probably is. Stay informed and stay safe when browsing online listings.
