dispatching their verdicts to completely disavow the image on Sunday. He narrated how the Palace was approached for providing the unaltered image. However, the agencies were met with radio silence and subsequently decided to abort its circulation.

It remains a rarity for news agencies to explicitly requisition that photographs be expunged from the public sphere. Chetwynd acknowledged this, asserting, "The unequivocal removal of content over the grounds of manipulation is infrequent, perhaps once a year." He outlined that similar instances in the past have involved controversial state-controlled agencies like those of North Korea and Iran.

Chetwynd eschewed ambiguity to assertively state AFP's position, emphasizing the sanctity of maintaining public trust. "The paramount issue at play is one of trust, especially against the backdrop of waning public faith in overall institutions and, more importantly, in the media. Therefore, it is of supreme importance to us that photographed imagery honestly and comprehensively represents the objective reality it aims to convey."
