

Apple Withdraws Data Protection Tool Amid UK Security Clash

Description

Apple has decided to remove a strong data security tool in the UK. This tool is called Advanced Data Protection (ADP). With ADP, only the account owner can see their photos and documents because it uses end-to-end encryption.

Recently, the UK government asked to see this user data. Apple did not want to create a way for others to access this data, saying it could make security weaker for everyone.

Now, Apple will not allow people in the UK to turn on ADP. This means some data on iCloud will not be fully encrypted. Data with standard encryption can be accessed by Apple and shared with law enforcement if they have a warrant.

Privacy experts are upset about this decision. They say it makes online security weaker. Some believe it is unusual for a company to stop a service because of government demands.

Apple said it is "gravely disappointed" that British customers can't use ADP. They are committed to keeping user data safe and hope to offer ADP again in the future.
