

Boeing to Cut 17,000 Jobs During Strike - Update

Description

Amidst the ongoing strike at the Boeing factory, the company has announced plans to reduce its workforce by 10%, equating to approximately 17,000 employees. This strategic move comes as Boeing grapples with financial losses and production disruptions caused by the strike. The workforce reduction will affect various levels of employees, including executives and managers, as communicated by the new CEO, Kelly Ortberg.

Boeing, a global company with a workforce of around 170,000 employees, primarily concentrated in manufacturing facilities in Washington and South Carolina, has been reeling from substantial financial losses exceeding $25 billion since the beginning of 2019. The strike, involving 33,000 union machinists since September 14, has further exacerbated Boeing's challenges. Despite recent discussions, a resolution was not reached, leading Boeing to file an unfair-labor-practices charge against the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.

Furthermore, Boeing's third-quarter financial report painted a bleak picture, with a cash burn of $1.3 billion and a loss of $9.97 per share. The company also disclosed significant write-downs totaling $5 billion related to various projects. This financial turmoil has prompted Boeing to defer the launch of its new aircraft, the 777X, and discontinue the production of the cargo version of its 767 jet.

In response to these adversities, Ortberg emphasized the necessity for structural changes to enhance competitiveness and long-term customer delivery. As the third CEO to assume leadership at Boeing in under five years, Ortberg faces a daunting task of steering the company out of turbulent waters. The company's reputation has been marred by incidents such as the Max aircraft mishap and the NASA safety concern regarding a Boeing spacecraft.

In conclusion, Boeing's current predicament underscores the immense challenges it faces, demanding swift and decisive actions to navigate through this crisis successfully and ensure sustained viability in the aerospace industry.
