

Captain America: Brave New World – What Critics Are Saying

Description

Marvel

Marvel Studios recently debuted “Captain America: Brave New World” in theaters nationwide, but early critical receptions suggest the film may be grappling with significant shortcomings.

With a staggering 111 reviews tabulated, the film's aggregate rating currently languishes at a mere 52% (5.5/10) on Rotten Tomatoes, marking it as one of the least favorably received entries in the Marvel Cinematic Universe. It trails only “Eternals” at 47% (5.6/10) and “Ant-Man and the Wasp: Quantumania” at a dismal 46% (5/5.10), while narrowly surpassing offerings like “Secret Invasion” at 53% (6.6/10) and “The Marvels” at 62% (5.9/10).

Moreover, on Metacritic, it holds a bleak score of 43/100, a valuation that parallels “Dark Phoenix” and sets a new low for the franchise.

Critics' assessments reveal a collective disappointment:

“While the film exhibits a brisk pace and energetic action, it remains hindered by inconsistent tonal shifts that preclude its attainment of greatness.” – Helen O’Hara, Empire

“The film strives for bland neutrality, resulting in a viewing experience that is both tedious and bewildering.” – Odie Henderson, Boston Globe

“A rambling exploration of character devoid of meaning, the narrative struggles under the weight of the Marvel brand.” – Richard Lawson, Vanity Fair

The film is poised for broad release this week and is projected to achieve a global opening weekend of approximately $190 million, with the United States contributing nearly half of that total during the extended President’s Day weekend.
