

Class Action Lawsuit Unpacked: Kraft Mac & Cheese Under Fire

Description

If you bought Kraft Mac & Cheese, you might get money from a new lawsuit against the brand. A lawyer named Angela talks about this on TikTok.

Many people are upset. They say Kraft says its Mac & Cheese has no artificial preservatives or colors. However, some ingredients, like citric acid, sodium phosphate, and sodium triphosphate, are additives.

The lawsuit wants Kraft to pay people who bought the product. Angela explains that many people trust the ads when they buy food.

The FDA says these ingredients are not harmful, but some people disagree. They think the ingredients can cause health issues.

Some viewers shared personal stories. One person said their child is allergic to certain types of citric acid. Another person noticed that their child had foot pain after eating Mac & Cheese.

People want to join the lawsuit to get money back for their purchases. However, they cannot get money until the lawsuit is finished and settled.
