Rachel Kushner's Creation Lake has been shortlisted for the Booker prize

Creation Lake

Rachel Kushner (Jonathan Cape (UK, 5 September); Scribner (US, 3 September))

Creation Lake by Rachel Kushner is a thrilling blend of espionage, humor, and historical insight, weaving a tale from the era of Neanderthals to modern-day undercover operations. This intriguing novel has earned its place on the Booker prize longlist.

The protagonist, Sadie Smith, an undercover operative, is dispatched to France to dismantle a group of eco-activists known as Le Moulin. Through a web of intrigue, she infiltrates the group, showcasing her amoral tactics with charismatic precision.

As the narrative unfolds, we witness Sadie's complex persona and her entanglement within the Moulinard community. Simultaneously, a series of emails from an enigmatic figure named Bruno Lacombe adds a poignant layer to the story, delving into themes of human evolution and societal conflict.

Moreover, the book's intricate structure, alternating between past and present, enhances the gripping suspense and emotional depth of the plot. Bruno's contemplations on Neanderthals offer a unique perspective, resonating with readers on a visceral level.

Without revealing spoilers, Creation Lake keeps readers on the edge, pondering the intricacies of morality and the consequences of one's actions. For those craving more thought-provoking reads, "The Ministry for the Future" by Kim Stanley Robinson offers a compelling exploration of climate fiction.
