
Diddy Accused of Witness Tampering, Defense Denies Claims

Description

An abruptly convened hearing concerning the incarcerated Sean “Diddy” Combs’ sex trafficking case, scheduled for tomorrow, may represent a pivotal moment for the forthcoming trial, particularly in light of the impending leadership transition within the U.S. Attorney’s office.

In a late November 15 filing, the current U.S. Attorney, Damian Williams, disclosed that prosecutors have acquired prison notes and recordings documenting the ‘I’ll Be Missing You’ singer’s purported “relentless efforts” to financially compensate potential witnesses, in addition to making unauthorized external communications and exerting pressure on other possible witnesses.

“Following the defendant’s incarceration, Bureau of Prisons (BOP) investigators recovered notes from the defendant’s cell during a premeditated nationwide sweep of BOP facilities,” the government asserted late last week, emphasizing that an independent “Filter Team” reviewed the material to ensure the separation of privileged information.

Nevertheless, Combs’ defense team has raised vehement objections regarding alleged constitutional infringements.

“Defense counsel has recently become aware that the prosecution possesses attorney-client privileged material, including the defendant’s own notes,” attorneys Marc Agnifilo and Teny Geragos articulated in a letter to Judge Arun Subramanian on Monday, concerning their high-profile 55-year-old client, who faces the prospect of life imprisonment if convicted in a trial set to commence on May 5, 2025.

Following a swiftly resolved rape and abuse lawsuit initiated by ex-girlfriend Cassie Ventura last year, alongside a mounting array of civil litigations, Combs was apprehended on September 16 in a New York City hotel lobby. He faces charges including racketeering, sex trafficking, and the transportation of individuals for the purposes of prostitution during what he described as “freak offs” fuelled by substance use.

Despite offering a $50 million bail, pledging to submit to home detention, and agreeing to converse solely with family and legal counsel, Combs has been denied pre-trial release on two occasions. A third bond hearing is scheduled for November 22, yet tomorrow’s proceedings could supersede that if Judge Subramanian deems it necessary. In their November 15 submission, prosecutors reiterated earlier successful arguments opposing Combs’ release, further bolstered by the new materials obtained from the Bureau of Prisons.

Combs’ legal representatives are undoubtedly striving to persuade the judge towards granting their client release, even if such advocacy necessitates resorting to bold rhetorical measures.

“The search and seizure operations breach Mr. Combs’ Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendment rights,” they argued, successfully advocating for a hearing on November 19 regarding the material seized from Combs’ cell. “Moreover, the deliberate targeting of a pre-trial detainee’s work product and privileged materials—generated in preparation for trial—constitutes egregious government conduct, culminating in a substantive due process violation.”

The prosecution has a mere hour remaining on Monday to respond to the court in New York City.

Judge Subramanian stated that “the Court will hold a hearing on this matter tomorrow, November 19, 2024, at 3:00 PM in Courtroom 15A of the Daniel Patrick Moynihan Courthouse, 500 Pearl Street, New York, New York, unless the parties mutually agree to a remote conference instead.”

“While attempting to evade law enforcement oversight, the defendant has, among various activities, orchestrated social media campaigns aimed at influencing the jury pool; endeavored to publicly disseminate materials advantageous to his case; and engaged witnesses through intermediaries,” the government claims in a heavily redacted opposition to Combs’ latest bail appeal.

More disturbingly, an almost entirely redacted October 4 communication involving the incarcerated Combs and “one of his adult sons” suggests a clear intent to intimidate victims and witnesses into silence or to elicit testimony favorable to his defense.

“The Government refrained from previously disclosing these recordings due to ongoing investigative activities; however, it is now presenting this evidence in light of the defendant’s recent intensified efforts to sway the jury pool in this criminal matter,” prosecutors indicated in a slightly redacted footnote within their 30-page filing, bolstered by extensive exhibits.

Nevertheless, the Southern District of New York Attorney’s Office has yet to respond to the Judge’s directive. Soon to be led by Donald Trump appointee and former SEC Chair Jay Clayton, the office has also not provided a response to Deadline’s request for comment. Updates will follow once the prosecution offers a statement.

Combs’ situation has deteriorated significantly since his arrest two months ago.

The sequence of events ranges from his arrest, through his dual denials of pre-trial release, to an accumulation of civil lawsuits, all underscoring a series of missteps by the once-revered marketer as he attempts to regain control of the narrative surrounding his alleged malefactions. Earlier this month, Combs and his legal team faced a setback when Judge Subramanian rejected their motion for a gag order concerning witnesses and other participants in both his criminal case and the numerous civil suits against him.

A similar outcome could very well transpire on Tuesday.
