

FAA grounds SpaceX Falcon 9 rockets, stopping liftoffs on Space Coast

Description

The SpaceX Falcon 9 rocket fleet has been put on hold by the FAA due to an upper-stage failure during a recent launch, which resulted in Starlink satellites being deployed into an irregular orbit. This grounding impacts the Space Coast's busy launch schedule, with 46 out of the 50 missions in 2024 being Falcon 9 launches.

The FAA stated that the investigation aims to enhance public safety, determine the cause of the incident, and implement corrective actions to prevent future occurrences. SpaceX will need FAA approval to resume flights after addressing any issues related to the mishap.

The recent Falcon 9 mission from Vandenberg Space Force Base experienced an upper-stage leak, resulting in the satellites being deployed at a lower altitude than planned. The satellites will re-enter the Earth's atmosphere safely.

SpaceX remains confident in its rocket production and launch capabilities, emphasizing its commitment to safety and operational reliability. The company will conduct a thorough investigation in collaboration with the FAA to prevent similar incidents.

This incident serves as a reminder of the challenges and complexities of spaceflight. Despite the setback, SpaceX remains optimistic about its future missions and commitment to delivering payloads to orbit safely. Stay tuned for updates on the Space Coast's launch schedule and latest news from Cape Canaveral Space Force Station and NASA's Kennedy Space Center at floridatoday.com/space.
