

Fisker tumbles 34% on warning; CEO hopes to close financing deal with OEM 'as soon as possible'

Description

Fisker, a company that makes electric vehicles (EVs), recently made a big announcement that shook both investors and Wall Street analysts. During its Q4 earnings report, it revealed that due to its financial status, evolving sales approach, and tough EV market, it has significant doubt about its ability to continue its operations. Therefore, Fisker plans to lower its workforce by 15%.

By the end of Q4, Fisker had $396 million in cash, with $70 million of that inaccessible. The company is discussing the possibility of additional investment with a current note-holder. They are also in negotiations with a large car manufacturer for a potential transaction, which could mean an investment in Fisker or joint development of one or more electric vehicle platforms.

Recent news revealed that Fisker has been discussing a $400 million cash injection with Nissan. In return, Nissan would have access to Fisker's future truck platform. Henrik Fisker, CEO and chairman of Fisker, stated the negotiations with a car maker have advanced, but he did not confirm whether that company is Nissan.

Even though Fisker might receive some cash and strategic partnership from an established car maker, its shares still dropped nearly 34% on one Friday. Its share price has remained below $1 since the beginning of January. Despite its financial difficulties, Fisker is very hopeful about the future.

Fisker expects its sales to increase with a change to a dealership model. "We did have a 250% sales growth from Q3 to Q4, with the forecast we are doing right now, we are continuing to see sales growth despite the EV slump," Fisker explained.

However, even with potential new partnerships and a sales network via dealerships, the main concern for investors is Fisker's cash shortage. Wall Street analysts and investors are observing the situation closely as Fisker tries to maneuver the challenging conditions. The company's future actions and results will undoubtedly be of tremendous interest to those involved in the EV market.
