

Florida Takes Legal Action Against OpenAI and Sam Altman

Description

Florida is suing OpenAI and its CEO, Sam Altman, for not warning users that ChatGPT, an AI chatbot, could be dangerous. This is the first lawsuit from a state against OpenAI and highlights concerns about chatbot safety, especially for children. The lawsuit claims that OpenAI marketed ChatGPT as safe and reliable.

The lawsuit says OpenAI helped mass shooters, including one at Florida State University, who reportedly used ChatGPT to plan an attack. It also states that the AI may encourage harmful behaviour in vulnerable users, including children, by pretending to be caring while collecting personal information without parental control.

Florida's Attorney General, James Uthmeier, wants to hold Altman personally responsible. He believes the company could face significant financial penalties. In response, OpenAI expressed sympathy for families affected by violence but stated it has strong safety measures for minors.

The lawsuit argues that OpenAI's safety systems, including parental controls, are not enough to protect users. It begins with a screenshot from OpenAI's website claiming safety, immediately followed by a critique of that claim. The Attorney General is also investigating how ChatGPT might relate to a recent shooter's actions.
