

God of War Actor Teases PS5 Reveal This Summer

Description

Christopher Judge, the voice actor behind Kratos, has inadvertently revealed plans regarding the upcoming God of War game during a meet-and-greet. This information, shared originally on a Twitch channel and rediscovered on Reddit, suggests that fans can anticipate an announcement in late summer. This aligns with recent speculation that the next significant title from Santa Monica Studio will debut in 2027.

In the recording, Judge is seen explaining that TC Carson will return as Kratos in the God of War Trilogy Remake, indicating that Judge himself will not participate in this project. He confirms that the remakes will introduce advanced technology and a new combat system.

Judge further disclosed insights about Santa Monica Studio's impending game, describing it as possibly resembling a new intellectual property. Many speculate it might explore a different mythology, with Ancient Egypt being a potential setting.

Previously circulating rumours indicated that an official announcement could occur later this year, followed by the game's release in 2027. Given this context, it is plausible that the reveal may coincide with a State of Play event during the Summer Game Fest. However, Judge's reference to a late summer timeline could imply that an announcement might transpire slightly later than anticipated.

As discussions intensify around this upcoming title, interest continues to grow among fans eager to learn about Santa Monica Studio's latest developments. The gaming community will likely remain alert to any updates as the late summer window approaches.
