

'House of the Dragon' S3 Episode 5 Character Rankings

Description

The website, Vulture, is known for its engaging and humorous reviews of TV series and their weekly episodes.

Most recently, they've covered and created a fun and detailed scorecard for a recent episode of "House of Dragon". This scorecard rates various characters on a scale of 0 to 10, based on their performance, role and actions in the episode. The scores are often subjective and provided for comedic effect.

In this episode review, the main character Aegon is highlighted for his return from a dragon attack. Aegon gains sympathy points for his burnt wounds, but also gains criticism due to his unstable position in the storyline. The author emphasizes the humor in unfortunate situations, laughing at the character's attempt to climb out of deep trouble.

The world of politics and scheming are also greatly highlighted in this episode. Emphasis is placed on various elaborate council meetings and secret plotting among the characters, adding suspense and drama to the ongoing story.

The protagonist's wife, Rhaenyra, is praised for her character development and cunning strategies. The idea of training commoners to become dragon riders is suggested, resulting in a hilarious imagine of a musical montage of people learning to fly dragons.

Many characters - both from past and present, central and secondary - are evaluated and scored based on their actions, traits, and contributions to the storyline. All these add to Vulture's unique take on reviewing and analyzing episodes making it a fun read for fans.
