

Industry's Longest-Serving Flight Attendant to Retire After 66 Years

Description

Joan Prince Crandall has worked as a flight attendant for over 66 years. She started her career in 1959 with Pacific Airlines. Joan liked the job because it allowed her to travel and meet new people.

She remembers the stylish uniforms and the focus on good service. The role of flight attendants has changed over time. Today, they focus on safety and help passengers during emergencies. Joan has worked with many airlines, including Delta Air Lines.

In the past, airlines had strict rules for flight attendants. For example, some made them quit if they got married. Joan did not face these rules but remembers them. She enjoyed her job and fought to stay in the profession.

Now, she is getting ready to retire. Joan plans to write a book and travel more. She feels lucky to have had a long and enjoyable career. After retiring, she will explore the world without her flight attendant duties.
