

Is it Worth Betting on DOGE's ATH After the Bitcoin Halving?

Description

The recent Bitcoin halving event had a positive impact on Dogecoin (DOGE) as it rose 3% to $0.157 in the hours following the halving. Investors were taking long positions for DOGE in the futures market, indicating optimism in the coin's growth prospects. The historical relationship between DOGE and halving events was also analyzed, showing that while the 2016 halving had little impact on DOGE, the 2020 event led to a temporary price decline followed by significant growth. A popular crypto trader predicted that DOGE could reach or come close to its all-time high of $0.73 by July/August based on historical data analysis. Furthermore, whale investors were bullish on DOGE's prospects, with higher long exposure compared to retail investors on Binance. The market sentiment also leaned towards greed, suggesting an increase in buying pressure in the coming days. Overall, DOGE's performance post-halving remains a point of interest for crypto enthusiasts.
