

Is Now the Right Time to Buy SpaceX Stock?

Description

Space Exploration Technologies, commonly known as SpaceX, held a successful initial public offering (IPO), with its stock price rising by 19% on the first day of trading. Investors who purchased shares at the IPO price of £135 are pleased as the stock continues to climb following its launch.

As of now, SpaceX shares have jumped 58% since the IPO. Retail investors are trying to decide whether to invest immediately, wait until the excitement calms, or avoid the stock altogether. Their choice largely depends on individual investment goals.

The stock was priced at a level that may not reflect the current value of the company's operations. However, much like Tesla, investors are optimistic about future prospects, making SpaceX a popular choice among momentum traders.

SpaceX already dominates the commercial space launch market, accounting for 80% of U.S. launches last year. Additionally, the Starlink satellite internet service and its new xAI artificial intelligence initiative are seen as promising for future profits. The company has invested £60 billion to expand its AI capabilities.

Investors are currently focusing less on traditional valuation metrics, which suggests a period of volatility ahead. Historical trends indicate that, similar to Tesla, SpaceX shares could experience significant fluctuations.

In the coming months, investors may find opportunities to buy shares at lower prices as the initial excitement starts to fade. Elon Musk predicts SpaceX could generate £1 trillion in revenue by 2030, which adds to the speculation around its long-term value.
