

Jane's Addiction Concert Ends Early After Band Fight on Boston Stage

Description

Title: Band Jane's Addiction had a fight at their concert.

At a concert in Boston on Friday night, there were problems. Members of the band Jane's Addiction argued on stage. Lead singer Perry Farrell and guitarist Dave Navarro argued and then fought. A man jumped between them to stop the fight. After that, the concert ended early. Video of the fight spread on social media.

A fan said, "This is very unusual. I have never seen this at any concert before."

Perry's wife Etty Lau Farrell said Perry was frustrated. She said that the music was very loud and Perry's voice was not heard well. Perry has a throat problem, and he was very upset about it.

The band is on tour for the first time in 15 years. However, they cancelled the next concert in Bridgeport, Connecticut. They announced this on social media.

"We are very sorry for the problem that happened at the concert last night. Therefore, we have cancelled the next concert," the band said on their Facebook page.

Ticket holders for the cancelled concert will get their money back.

Concert promoter Live Nation did not comment on the fight.
