Kofi Kingston and Xavier Woods Among Latest WWE Releases

Description

Reports have emerged that Kofi Kingston and Xavier Woods have left WWE, a significant development in the wrestling world as they depart the company after more than a decade. Their removal from the WWE roster has sparked considerable online discussion, especially following the relocation of The New Day to the WWE alumni section of the company's website. This transition has been confirmed by sources including Fightful Select and BodySlam.

Sean Ross Sapp from Fightful indicated that their decision to part ways was mutual, distinguishing it from a standard roster cut. This unexpected exit raises eyebrows, particularly as Kingston and Woods are regarded as one of WWE's most successful tag teams. Immediate reactions within the wrestling community were characterised by shock, with many previously perceiving them as long-term members of the WWE family. However, opinions have evolved, suggesting that no talent is guaranteed long-term security within the company.

As first ballot Hall of Famers, Kingston and Woods' departure signifies a shift in WWE's landscape. Meanwhile, reaction on social media hints that their exit might present opportunities for rival promotions, particularly AEW, which is already garnering interest in securing their talents.

MJF, a prominent figure in AEW, acknowledged the changes with a playful nod on Instagram, while others have also chimed in regarding the situation. Kingston and Woods are anticipated to attract substantial interest on the open market; sources have noted that their salaries exceed seven figures, making them valuable assets in professional wrestling.

The New Day's exit comes less than a year after agreeing to contract extensions lasting until 2030. Their release may involve a 90-day waiting period before they can return to the ring, limiting immediate opportunities under new identities. In the meantime, two other wrestlers, JC Mateo and Tonga Loa, also reportedly departed WWE. The future of talent releases within WWE remains uncertain, following a recent wave of departures, including significant names from the roster.
