

Kylie Jenner's Golden Globes Dress Pays Tribute to Liz Hurley

Description

Editor's Note: In this week's 'Look of the Week,' we delve into the buzzworthy outfits that caught everyone's attention.

Kylie Jenner and Timothée Chalamet stole the spotlight at the Golden Globe Awards with their charming appearance. This wasn't the first time the duo made heads turn at the event. Last year, they made a subtle debut, but this time, Jenner made a bold statement with her outfit.

Jenner dazzled in a silver chainmail dress from Versace's 1999 collection, a nod to the iconic gown previously worn by Liz Hurley in 1999. Hurley, known for her stunning red carpet appearances, had a close relationship with Versace, showcasing some of the most memorable outfits in fashion history.

The event saw a blend of classic and modern fashion inspirations, with guests like Ayo Edibiri channeling Julia Roberts' legendary 1990 Golden Globes look in a stylish Loewe suit. Despite dating one of Hollywood's biggest stars, Jenner shone on her own, showcasing her prowess in both beauty and fashion.

By donning the historic Versace dress, Jenner not only paid homage to the fashion icon but also established herself as a trendsetter in Hollywood's fashion scene. The Golden Globes once again proved to be a platform where style and sophistication meet.
