Matt Brown from 'Alaskan Bush People' found dead in Washington river

Description

A body recovered from a river in Washington state has been confirmed as Matt Brown, a cast member of the reality television series "Alaskan Bush People." The discovery has raised significant concerns and emotions among fans and family alike.

The Okanogan County Sheriff's Office reported that a private search team found the body in the Okanogan River on Saturday. Following this, the county coroner established the identity of the deceased as Matt Brown. The sheriff's office indicated that an investigation would determine the cause and manner of death, while expressing condolences to the Brown family.

Matt Brown's brothers, Noah and Bear Brown, shared poignant messages on social media following the tragic news. Noah recounted his presence during the body's recovery and confirmed the identification of his brother. The family has described Matt as intelligent and creative, highlighting his pursuit of knowledge and skills such as sign language and Spanish.

Brown had previously been open about his battles with addiction and mental health issues. Bear Brown revealed his fears regarding his brother's challenges in a TikTok video, expressing disbelief that Matt would intentionally harm himself. The family, in their statements, underscored Matt's impact on others, noting the encouragement he provided to those grappling with similar challenges.

The search for Matt Brown had begun after a report was made about a man sitting in shallow water. The situation took a darker turn when a gun was discovered near the scene. Bear suggested that evidence indicated a self-inflicted injury based on observations made after the coroner's examination.

Local authorities, collaborating with volunteer groups, conducted extensive searches, culminating in the recovery effort that led to Brown's identification. The family intends to honour Matt's memory by focusing on the lives he touched and the love he shared with others.
