

NBA Twitter responds to news about Steve Kerr and Warriors' contract extension agreement

Description

During the 2023-24 NBA season, Steve Kerr found himself in the final year of his contract with the Golden State Warriors. In a strategic move that has been applauded across sports circles, the Warriors organization decided to secure their longstanding head coach for the future before the end of the regular season.

ESPN's stalwart reporter Adrian Wojnarowski, broke the news that Kerr had agreed to an exceptionally lucrative two-year, $35 million contract extension with the Warriors. This groundbreaking contract sets an impressive record, catapulting Kerr into the echelon of the highest-paid coach in league history with a staggering annual salary of $17.5 million.

Ever since taking over the reins in 2014, Kerr has notched up 501 regular-season victories, making him the second winniest coach in the illustrious history of the Golden State Warriors. His tenure as head coach is decorated with four championship titles, which he clinched presenting a united front alongside basketball icons, Steph Curry, Klay Thompson, and Draymond Green.

The news of Kerr's contract extension sparked a flurry of reactions across Twitter. Friday evening saw fans and analysts sharing their takes on this significant development. Basketball enthusiasts can check out some of the reactions on the popular social media platform.

In the grand scheme of things, followers of the Warriors are thrilled about the prospect of continuity under Kerr's leadership. Likewise, Kerr's remarkable success in the last eight years illustrated through his championship wins upholds the confidence in his abilities to keep steering the team towards greatness.
