

New York Dolls' Johansen Seeks Support in Stage 4 Cancer Fight

Description

CNN —

David Johansen, well-known as an actor and singer from the New York Dolls, is currently facing serious health challenges. According to his daughter, he has been battling stage 4 cancer for almost a decade and recently discovered he has a brain tumor. This has led to complications, and he has been bedridden and incapacitated, needing care around the clock.

A fundraiser hosted by The Sweet Relief Musicians Fund aimed to support Johansen and his family during this tough time. His daughter, Leah Hennessey, revealed the family's struggles, including a recent fall that left Johansen with two broken vertebrae. The fall exacerbated his condition, leading to increased illness and the need for intensive care.

Johansen, who was the focus of a recent documentary, shared a statement expressing the severity of his situation. He admitted to experiencing unbearable pain and emphasized the urgent need for assistance. The funds raised will be used to hire caregivers and cover the family's expenses during this challenging period.

Despite the hardships, Johansen and his family are grateful for any support they receive. Your help can make a difference in this difficult time for the beloved musician.
