In an unforeseen circumstance illustrating the imperfection of the corporate world, American retail behemoth Walmart has inadvertently disclosed the forthcoming Pokémon Squishmallow puzzle piece.

The unexpected revelation was astutely identified by u/Britzaaaa on the dedicated Squishmallow subreddit (discussed in-depth at Siliconera), which swiftly drew the curtain back on Dragonite's impending addition to the illustrious Squishmallow collection. The official Walmart listing has since been eradicated by Walmart. Still, this credible leak has instigated an avalanche of excitement in anticipation for its eventual release. The grandeur of its appearance is utterly mesmerizing, embodying a delightful blend of irresistible cuteness and comical flair.

In terms of cost, the 10-inch plush Dragonite is predicted to retail at a quite palatable price point of $14.97 – aligning coherently with the monetary standards observed in other analogous Pokémont Squishmallows within the range.

We find the wing and antenna details of this plush toy quite compelling, intricately engineered to provoke an irresistible urge to engage hands-on with this resplendent novelty.

Squishmallows are typically procured through multiple reliable avenues, including the official website of the toy brand, The Pokémon Center, and select third-party retailers encompassing Walmart. Dragonite's official release date remains undisclosed; however, upon its anticipated arrival, it will join an already illustrious ensemble, which includes fan favorites like Pikachu, Piplup, Clefairy, Gengar, Teddiursa, Togepi, and Snorlax.

Clefairy and Teddiursa are the latest additions to this dreamy assemblage, currently available in a broad spectrum of sizes to accommodate any Squishmallow enthusiast.

How do you perceive the imminent Dragonite Squishmallow? What Pokémons would you wish to see metamorphosed into these tantalizingly soft and squishy renditions? Voice your thoughts in the comments section beneath.
