Season 2 Update Enhances Male Heroes in Marvel Rivals

Description

The latest update for Marvel Rivals, Season 2, has caused quite a stir among players. It seems that the characters in the game have undergone a significant change – their rear ends have become more prominently featured. Many fans have noticed this shift in design, with some pointing out that characters like Venom, Invisible Woman, and Emma Frost now have more accentuated curves. However, some heroes were initially left out of this trend, including Captain America and Wolverine, who were criticized for having a lack of curves.

With the introduction of Season 2, all characters in Marvel Rivals have now been given a boost in the posterior department. Even the default skins have been upgraded to emphasize this new feature. This change has been met with mixed reactions from players, with some appreciating the attention to detail, while others find the changes comically subtle.

The developers of Marvel Rivals seem to be aware of the impact these design changes have on the player community. Some fans have jokingly guessed that the developers are basing their decisions on what receives the most attention on social media platforms. Regardless, the game has fully embraced this new aesthetic, incorporating it into various aspects of the gameplay.

As players continue to enjoy the game with its caked-up characters, one thing is clear – the developers have a clear vision for the direction of Marvel Rivals. With more heroes expected to be introduced in the future, the question remains: how far will they take this trend? Despite the mixed reactions from players, one thing is certain – Marvel Rivals is not shying away from embracing the cake.
