

Selection Predictions for the 36 NASCAR Racers in Bristol: An Insider's Look at the Fantasy Game

Description

Our ongoing 36 for 36 initiative on NASCAR.com heads next to the Bristol Motor Speedway. Featuring 36 races within a season, each boasting a full complement of 36 Charter cars, our league of players undertake the exciting task of selecting one vehicle per race. The crux, however, lies in the indisputable rule - once a car is picked, it becomes off-limits for the remaining season. This results in every car being picked once, essentially transforming the competition into a survival pool of strategic proportions.

Join our esteemed panel, comprising Dustin Albino from Jayski, along with Steve Luvender and Cameron Richardson from NASCAR.com, as they embark on a quest to outmaneuver each other on this season-long adventure. Their objective? To display their knack for strategic selection and prove their mastery in picking prowess.

Moreover, we extend an opportunity for the community to influence the weekly selection with the fourth "community" 36 for 36 pick, determined via fan voting on the notable r/NASCAR subreddit. The intriguing question looming in the air - can the majority vote dethrone our trio of experts?

Race 4 culminated in the following rankings: Steve Luvender entrenched himself at the summit with 103 points. Dustin Albino secured second place with 93 points, while the r/NASCAR community and Cameron Richardson lagged behind with 89 and 70 points respectively.

As we venture into the 5th race at Bristol, the previous week's race at Phoenix significantly altered our 36 for 36 standing. Steve Luvender's selection of Ryan Preece resulted in a disappointing 23rd-place finish while Cameron Richardson and r/NASCAR community found success with their choice of Chase Briscoe, securing a commendable tally of 30 points. The real triumph, however, was experienced by Dustin Albino, who boldly opted for Ryan Blaney who remarkably finished in fifth place.

Drawing the curtains on the last race, our experts now ready themselves for the tricky terrain of Bristol. The sheer unpredictability of the venue piques suspense, inviting everyone's attention to how our strategists will navigate through this phase.
