Tracker Season 3, Episode 18 Prepares for Jensen Ackles' Return

Description

Sunday's episode of "Tracker" did not provide clear answers about Colter Shaw's father but introduced new clues. Colter found Buck Avery, played by Michael O'Neill, and asked about his father, Ashton Shaw, who had been in the Alaskan wilderness before his death. Buck was cautious but confirmed he knew Ashton.

During their conversation, Colter explained details from his father's journals, such as Ashton's sudden departure from academic life and his move to an isolated area where he was involved with a group called the Chronostasis Institute. This caught Buck's attention, as his family once leased land nearby to the government. This land contained a secret research facility that has since closed down.

Buck claimed the operation received funding from DARPA, which means it was linked to advanced military research. He noted that it included various experiments but ended abruptly due to an accident. This incident led to the facility's sudden closure, making it seem like it never existed.

Buck then mentioned Dr. Serena Jukic, a researcher connected to the project, who might have information about what happened. He revealed that Ashton was in the area during the accident, but his intentions at the time are unclear.

The episode ended teasing the show's finale. Colter left a voicemail for his brother Russell, revealing their father's involvement in a government cover-up and suggesting they search for Dr. Jukic together.
